Artivism

This year we invited schools to create artwork for a digital exhibition in response to Climate Crisis conversations. This presentation includes the various artwork created using drawing, painting, collage, textiles, mixed media and photography.

We have included previous artwork from The Climate Forest project 2021 and The Climate Unity project 2022.

- Our reflective students have worked hard to create these personal and profound images about the climate. They have thought carefully about how our urban environments can be greatly improved and rebuilt to play a leading role in rewilding and repairing in the years to come.
- They have shown great innovation and resilience in creating these highly detailed and fascinating visions of the future.

“We are very pleased about the quality of the artwork, and I must say even just installing it made everyone interested and smile. The climate change messages told through the work produced by children really do have tremendous impact. I was pleased to have witnessed several members of staff chatting about climate change and what it means regarding their lifestyle, their conversations most certainly prompted by the exhibit.”

What is it to be a good steward of the earth?....

“being an architect for a better world.”

“it encompasses all the things we do in our community and the world.”

“helping everyone around you, looking after them and being a better person.”

“basically, caring for everyone and everything.”

Thank you for taking part. Please join us again next year.
